The Lemmon Slave Case. WEE GENTRET BETWEEN VIRGINIA AND NEW YORK.

To tas Excellency MYRON H. CLARK, Governor of the State of New York:— Sm.—I am prompted by my citizenship under the constitution of this State, as well as by your position as chief magistrate of the commonwealth, under a concurrent resolution of the Legislature, passed

February 24, 1855, to address to you such considera-tions as I entertain in respect to the law and facts of the case mentioned in the resolution to which ! have referred. You may remember that it is couched in the following language:-

Resolved, That Ogden Hoffman, the prosent Attorner Seneral, be, and hereby it, authorized and directed, to gether with such coursel as the flowersor may deep proper to associate with him to defend the interests of him State, involved in an appeal brought on, or proceed, by direction of the legislature of Virginia, from a decision by one of the landsets of the supreme Court of the State, in the Lemmon slave case.

I am informed that the case is in readiness for argument at the next November general term of Supreme Court, to be held at the Ciry Hall in this city. Hefore proceeding to examine the case, I deem it well to correct an error in the resolution ested above, and to state the case as concisely as I lation, comes before our Supreme Court not on an appeal, in strict legal parlance, nor from a decision of Justice of that Court, but on a certiorari to Justice of the Superior Court of the city of New York, whose judgment is sought thereby to be reviewed. I have before me a printed case, from which I am able to gather the following facts, and to make the following statement:—

Mr. Jonathan Lemmon, a citizen of the State of Virginia, set out on a journey with eight slaves, inwording to go with them to the State of Texas to settle there. These slaves were held in the right of his wife, also a citizen and resident of Virginia The steamship Richmond City, in which they were embarked, put into New York, having sailed from the port of Norfolk. While the vesses was lying in the harber of New York, a colored man petitioned for a habeas corpus to bring the slaves into Court, to be dealt with according to law. The writ was granted by a Justice of the Superior Court of the city of New York. A hearing was had, and the slaves set at liberty by the Justice.

A most lame and negative answer, in the shape of a demurrer, was put in by the counsel of the pethioner to the return made by Lemmon, who alleged ownership and citizenship in the State of Virginia, and claimed the right of transit of the slaves to the place of their destination. The facts of the case being before the Judge, pro confesso, it remained for him alone to inquire as to the law of the case. This he decided to be against the right of Lemnon to held the slaves in the State of New York.

held the slaves in the State of New York.

I propose to give the case, as it comes cefore the supreme Court for argument next week, a hasty examination, and not having an interest of any kind in the case, except as a citizen, I have deemed it legitimate to address my considerations to your Excellancy. The law which must govern in the final disposition of this matter of Lemmon and no significance, is neither the law of Virginia, nor the law of New York, the common law, or the law of New York, the common law, or the law of nations—it is a section of only two lines in the fourth article of the constitution of the United States. The whole of this fourth article is nothing more nor less than a species of treaty stipulations by and between the several States—the sovereignties, the independence of the law of the national contracting parties to a convention or treaty treacting parties are supported in the great chair of the national government, as an essential ingredient and portion thereof, defining, it altique, sec. chater of the national government, as an essential ingredient and portion thereof, defining, limiting, setthing and regulating matters of inter-State relation, which might otherwise, in the course of human affairs and the current events of time, present vexed questions involving the doutrine of the common law and the law of nations. The four sections of this article, or treaty, have forever obviated the necessity of an appeal to those codes to settle or regulate matters embraced within their provisions. Such I conceive to be their nature and object; and it is within their compass that I find authority to assert that without the provisions of this treaty, the federal government, now eighty years old, never would have had a being, and become a great power among the nations of the earth. In the second section, tentth subdivision, it is solemnly stipolated that—
No person hed to service or layor is one state under

No person had to service or labor to one state under the laws thereof, escaping into another, stall, in conse-quence of any law or regination therein, be ducharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up or claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be

And here mark: nearly all the high contracting parties had in their domains slaves or persons held to service; slavery was an institution among them, known in the statute books, and the relation of masanown in the statute cooks, and the resistion of inta-ter and slave as much a subject of legislation as that of husband and wife, parent and child. Fae right to a runsway slave, no one can doubt, was cared for in this treaty with as much scruptics; y and precise of ciaim as any right ever secured by the style tweet sovereignties, however remote in lu-cality or diverse in language. In the lst sublows:—'The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States." And here let it be remarked that his provision reaches forth to the protection of all the privileges and immunities of citizens in where State they may happen to be: it can mean seathing less than what its terms plainly declare, to with the citizen clothed with certain rights and privileges at home, shall enjoy them in full while abroad in any other State of the confideracy; any other construction would make the stipulation incongraous, subject the rights of citizens to fluctuation in their social and commercial intersourse with each other as often as they passed from one State into another. If it mean that the citizen shall enjoy such rights only as per tain to the individuals of the State where he happens to be, then he must cast away at the boundary line of the State he enters one set of rights and privileges, and be clad with another set, however desirable the one or repugnant the other may be to him—a subject of loss and gain and gain and loss, according to circumstances, in his changeful pathway through the dominions of thirty-one States, far from homogeneous in their institutions and laws. Can it be so absardly received as that in a treaty arrangement, such as that entered into in this fourth article, the slaveholder who so vigilantly guarded his right of recapture of a fugitive from his service, should so far forget himself and his interests as not to make any provision for the services of his slave while his attendant abroad? Would he forget to secure by an equally strong and explicit section in tae treaty his right to hold a slave there had or had not been abolished? Did he never inconsistency not to be credited to the character whether the right to his control. There can be no dount, it seems to me, that this saction secures to the citizen saveholder while share and the report of the careful of the caref owner—and by his false step in that proceeding, I predict that the State of New York will have trouble in the premises.

I derive from my examination of the case the follewing conclusions:—

1.—That there is no power in the United States government, nor in that of any one of the States, to divest a citizen of a slave State of his ownership of or control over his slave, or to wrest his slave from his custody while or transitu with him in a free State; the law of the land leaves the slave to his own will.

2—That there is no power in the United States government, nor in that of any one of the States, to invest a citizen of a slave State with a right of recapture of the slave brought by him, or to restore such slave to his keeping when once the slave has cast off his allegiance while in transitu or resident with him in a free State.

3—That what is predicated of both master and slave, in the foregoing postulates, is true of them when the transit is in a Territory because their conditions remain unaltered, and whatever rights inhered to them while residents of a State, containe to inhere in a Territory as well while stationary a while transitory.

to inhere in a Territory as well while stationary a while transitory.

4 That there is no power in the United States government, nor in that of any one of the States, to prevent the reclamation and extradition of a stave who escapes from one State into another.

5—As long as citizenship of a slave State shall to a free State with his slave or slaves, so long may he hold them as such in its jurisdiction, whether his stay be long or short, or whether he become a resident or dweller for a day or a year—all state laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

5—No citizen of a slaveholding State coming into a free State with his slave or slaves, can be put to the plea of necessity of imroduction; he may consult his pleasure or convenience in their ingress or egress.

egress.

7—The will of the slave alone can dissolve the relation of master and slave, while in a State whose laws do not uphold the system of slavery, the master cannot invoke them to aid him in the abrogation of the relation; if dissolved by the will of the slave, evinced in the act of quitting the master, the master is powerless under them to restore the relation.

moster is powerless under them to restore the relation.

Now, sir, it is submitted for your consideration whether the foregoing resolution affords proper authority to employ counsel besides the Attorney General, and to disburse the treasure of the State of New York in a case so manifestly against the rights of a citizen of a saster State. This resolution is not a law; and so much the worse is it for that reason. Unlike a statute, it may not be repealed; its evil may not be reached like that of a miscule-vous-mactment; it most stand; but it does not follow that it must be operative; it is powerless without an execution. Shall it become potent in your official acts?

execution. Shall it become potent in your official acts?

I do not suppose that my humble opinions in the premises will avail with a high digmtary of State; but if they should find favor. I might hope that they would cause a proper consideration of the oath taken by all State officers to support the constitution of the United States. If the views entertained above of the intent of the first sub-division of the second section of the fourth article of the constitution of the United States be correct, then manifestly to oppose the claims of Virginia in the Lemmon affair is in contravention of the privilege of one of her citizens, and so far a neglect to support it in one of its most vital and essential items—one which is the grand reciprocity clause of the convention or treaty—the fraternizing ligament of more than Statesse twinship and brotherhood, the institution of slavery has never neen favored by me. I confess to no partiality for the system. My moral organization and education do not harmonize with its usages and economies. I have always had to labor with my own hands for a livelihood.

I would not have a sin-e to till my ground; To carry me, to fan me white I storp And tremble when I wake, for all the wealth That sinces bought and sold have ever carned.

That sinces bought and sold have ever careed.

But I find the system among the immunities of the cuizens of some of the States, and that they claim to be prote ted in their uses of it by virme of the supreme law of the land; and they place themselves on its foundations cam pricelegils. So long, therefore, as that law shall obtain and remain as it is their claim, I must respect and accord to them its fullest measure. In turn, I demand of them to respect all the rights I may have as a citizen of the State of New York.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

TUESDAY, Nov. 4-6 P. M.

The stock market was quite buoyant this morning and continued so to the close. With very large transactions prices were well sustained throughout transactions prices were well sustained throughout. The bears quietly look on, prepared to take advantage of every movement favoring their position. The bulls appear to have the power to inflate prices rapidly, and it is possible it may be real. The tide at this moment is setting in, and we have no doubt many may be deceived by the sudden turn in the market, and be fooliah enough to enter as purchasers. A few days will tell the whole story. Upon the first upward turn, after a long period of depression, the impression becomes pretty general among sion, the impression becomes pretty general among that class of speculators who operate for a rise, that the bottom has been touched, that the shorts will rush in and make up their supplies, and that the time bas surely arrived to go in largely for a general in-flation. A few days generally suffice to destroy all these fine prospects, and scatter all their calculations to the winds. It is very true that there is a bottom to the stock market as well as to everything else but it by no means follows that as soon as the bottom has been reached the market should bound ap with such an impetus as that just realized. The causes which have for weeks been operating to put down prices are still in force, and until they are down prices are still in force, and until they are removed, there can be no permanent improvement. So far as prices are concerned, independent of any artificial influence, they rule high enough. When we look into the financial affairs of the companies, the stocks of which hold prominent positions in the market, it appears most extraordinary that their current value is anything like that daily reported. With perhaps two or three exceptions, there is not a stock on the list, which can be figured out as being worth what it is selling for. We find them all running up and down like the mercury in the thermometer, and we can foresee the changes about as clearly as we can the changes in the weather. The current value of a fancy rail oad stock depends entirely upon the operations of the bulls and beers. Whether Erie is fifty or sixty depends wholly upon the ability of large holders to regulate the supply of stock in the market. Just so with Michigan Southern, New York Central, Reading, &c., &c. The money market has for some weeks been steadily tightening. The searcity of money and advance in value, compelled holders of stocks to realize, and the supply of stock upon the market was greater than the demand. The natural effect of such influences was a steady decline in prices Unless there is a favorable change in the money market it follows that the stock market must remain without improvement. Prices may recede to points where holders of stocks would submit to serious sacrifices for the purpose of raising money to carry them, and thus prevent a further decline; but as for running up prices, in the space of two or three days, as much as they lost in the previous two or three weeks, without removing the cause of the depression, is simply absurd, and we have no doubt a few days will suffice to convince certain speculators of the truth of that remark.

At the first board to-day Illinois Central bonds advanced | per cent; Cumberland Coal, 4; New York Central RR., 4; Eric, 14; Cleveland and Pitts burg, 4; Reading, 4; Michigan Southern, 24; Galena and Chicago, 14; Cleveland and Toledo, 14. Cincinnati, Columbus and Cleveland declined & per cent. The bears do not appear to be at all disheartened by this sudden turn in the market. They continue to put out contracts, buyers' or sellers' option freely, in any stage of prices. They act upon a general principle, and must, therefore, in the end be successful. They know, perhaps better than any other class of speculators, the rottenness of most or the stock securities on the market, and their operations are made accordingly. Bayers of stock generally are a wild, heedless, hap-hazard, blind, ignorant class of speculators, who know no more about the securities in which they deal than a dog does of astronomy, and they rush recklessly into any fancy that comes up, perfectly regardless of all influences for or against. The present state of the money market is the only thing considered, and they would hardly give that a thought, but for the necessity of hypothecating most of their purchases. The bulls may be right for a day, but the bears are sure to be right for all time. There are elements at work in our works of public improvement which must ultimately bring about bankruptcy. It has already overtaken many of them, and is rapidly approaching nearly all the rest. The sellers of stocks operate upon this basis, and it is the only sound and solid one to rest upon.

At the second board a further improvement was realized. New York Central Railroad advanced in per cent; Michigan Southern, 14: Erie, i; Cleveland and Toledo, i. At the close the tendency of prices was upward, and there was a more general disposition to buy. The money market has experienced no change, and that is the great stumbling block to any important improvement.

The steamship Arabia, from Eeston for Liverpool to-morrow, (Wednesday,) will take out nearly a million of dollars in specie.

The land sales of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, in October, reached $908,800, against $444,490 in October last year. Every purchase this October has been by an actual settler, whereas last year the company sold considerable parcels to speculators. The receipts of October will be about $300,000. Some of the directors who have been making a thorough examination of the road and its prospects, have recently returned! more fully confirmed than before in their favorable impressions of the result of the enterprise. The land sales promise to exceed their expectations, both in quantity and price, and their business to run far ahead of their capacity to transact it, without a very large increase of equipage. The company have just advanced the price of all their lands north of Mendota $5 per acre.
